

Editorial

Education and it's Motivational Factors

Dr. M Roy Bright

Former Lecturer in Technical Communication, Birla Institute of Applied Sciences.

DOI: <https://doi.org/10.24321/2456.4370.201901>

I N F O

E-mail Id:

mroybright@gmail.com

Orcid Id:

<https://orcid.org/0000-0002-1310-5974>

How to cite this article:

Bright MR. Education and it's Motivational Factors J Adv Res Eng & Edu 2019; 4(2): 1.

E D I T O R I A L

This issue offers research and ideas for further exploration on the contemporary topics of interest not only to the serious reader but also to society at large. Job satisfaction is the one ingredient that the army of the teaching fraternity is deprived of. This paper takes into cognizance that motivation is the key factor in developing a bridge between the management, the teacher and the taught. The efficacy of qualitative work and optimal output is directly proportional to motivation for which proper policies need to be put into place.

The next three articles are based on the Identity issues and learning that the displaced face in an alien cultures, an alien society and its norms of acceptance. The orphan needs an absolute and an all enveloping acceptance from society to be emotionally and socially healthy in order to be successful in life, while the Chinese student needs to be rooted in his own cultural identity and be a beneficiary of motivational game learning that result in a well adjusted human being. The need of a student to have a choice to be home-schooled which has a host of undeniable benefits is the next paper. It highlights the role of technology in such a parental endeavour including on-line and virtual teaching as tools to best activate the role of this unique form of learning.

The last article has delved into the benefits of Creative Writing Skills for the student which helps a love of words and inculcates critical thinking which colours all genres of literature and learning throughout life.

Interestingly, the underlying themes have been motivation, forms of Education and what they offer to the student of today, at a global level.

We hope that the reader will find deep satisfaction, having gone through these significant researches in the world of Education in this issue.